The Sundeck Pool

The all new Sundeck Pool by Duravit features slim panelling, which adds a finer nuance to the orthogonal design. Designed by the Austrian designer trio EOOS, the pool has been extended by around 30cm, offering a practical shelf surface which conceals the integrated technology.

Opened out, the upholstered leather cover presents a length of 95 inches. In addition, the cover insulates the pool helping to keep energy consumption down. If the Sundeck is not in use for longer periods of time, the water temperature can be lowered by activating the Eco or Stand-by mode to save on heating costs.

The innovative hygiene management system and temperature cycle keeps the water in motion continually passing it through an integrated filter at a desired temperature. Water can be left in the pool for up to three months. After taking off the upholstered shelf, the filter below can be removed and replaced in just a few steps. Using the control panel located below the new shelf, the pool can be emptied completely at the push of a button when the water needs to be changed.

Stone Art

ODYSSEY: Stone Architecture & Design recently introduced one of its exclusive collection—Ishi Kiri, bringing the tactility of stone as a material together with innovation in design. The new collection addresses the niche in innovative custom stone designing. Inspired by the traditional Japanese paper-folding art of Origami, it is intended to be utilised for surfaces, sculptures and cascades. Through customisation of these surfaces, in the form of back-lit and front-lit options for walls, the collection can be manipulated for diverse results. The use of white marble takes it a step forward in the direction of customised back-lit surfaces.
